Abstrak

The main subject of this research is to identify how the government policy is in implementing the Law No. of 2004 concerning Local Government in local government direct election (Pilkada). What the impact of local government direct election regarding the responsibility and the depose of the head of local government (kepala daerah) is; and how the future prospect relatiop between the head of local government and local parliament (DPRD) in performing the local administration as a result of the local election is.

The secondary source as the collected data is the main source in this research, collected through library research, which is supported by primary source that being fetched through interview with several respondents under purposive sampling. In addition, all the collected data has been analyzed quantitatively. The outcome of this research is that the direct election of local government (pilkada) is the new paradigm of local government election in Indonesian history, and the government has already implemented the Law No. 32 of 2004 through law and regulation and socialized the election in order to succeed the local government election that will be started in 1 June 2005.

The impact of this election is that the head of local government only present annual final report to local parliament. Moreover, the head of local government should provide the local government administration progressive report to central government and inform this report to public. The direct impact of these tinal and progressive reports as well as the information to public is without any sanction that could depose the head of local government. The head of local government only can be ousted before the period because of violating the law.

The procedure of depose the head of local government due to the breach of law, may come from public because of the crisis concerning the leadership of the head of local government may also extend from local parliament because of the violation of the vow. Furthermore, the deposing may approach from president due to the allegation of conducting corruption, coup d'etat and terrorism.

The local government direct election (Pilkada) will provide the bright future for the performance of government administration.

The new issue found in this research is that although it is possible under Indonesian regulation, however the fact is that it is difficult for an individual to enter the local election as a personal candidate.
