Abstrak

This article seeks to inform the readers about a new, emerging trend of political struggle in the global realm. In order to do this, the author invokes Roland Bleiker's conception of transversal politics. By utilizing this article, the author argues that we, international political struggle in the future until we cease to assume that politics could only be considered by its juridification and institutionalization. his reques us to reconceptualize our taken for granted notion of politics itself. This reconceptualization, in its turn, will illuminate our investigation that seeks to argue that the conception of state sovereignty is no longer tenable, and consequently has become a fertile ground for this transversal politics to flourish.
