Abstrak

This paper deals with quantifier "all" as the effect of context - dependence. We propose that the lack of context understanding on quantification without restriction violate the sentences. The result shows that epistemic modality, can repair such sentences because they can serve as the restriction for the quantificational force of another expression. Besides modal verbs there exist other expression of modality referred to as modal expressions or stance markers, such as always, usually, or often. This expressions will help speakers to limit the amount of their assertion about their knowledge, belief, or opinion.
