The scheme of checks and balances in the process of legislation in various countries, experienced a shift after judicial review accommodated. Legislation does not only involve executive institutions and the parliament but also the judiciary. Judicial review is a channel for the expression of public dissent against the decision taken by the legislators. Through the authority of judicial review, the Constitutional Court may overturn legislation. This is not because the Constitutional Court is in a superior position but because judicial review is an instrument of the checks and balances mechanism among institutions in the legislative process. Therefore, the presence of the Constitutional Court with powers of judicial review should be understood in order to contribute to the democratization in the legislation process.
