ABSTRACT
A mother who experiences an abortion often has a physical, psychological, and social interruption. This condition causes the mother to require her husband's supports. The purpose of this study was to explore the mother's experience related to her husband's supports during her abortion. This study applied a qualitative design with a descriptive phenomenological approach. In-depth interviews were conducted to five participants who were selected using purposive sampling method. The data were analyzed using a thematic content analysis with Colaizzi stages. It was obtained 11 themes. The result showed the mother's understanding of an abortion, the types of the husband's supports related to the husband's type and characteristics, the impacts, and the mother's hopes. It is recommended that the health services would design a counseling method as a form of a supportive treatment which involves and considers the husband's responses
