Marketing communication program evaluation in RRI's product repositioning from state radio (state apparatus body) into a public media (public service broadcasting) meant retransmitting its core values, philosophy, culture reputation and personnel inside its organization which indirectly implicated its products and brand image. The objective of this study to know the effect of the repositioning process and to gauge the perceptions of RRI listeners after the repositioning process. To analyze these effects, the writer uses the Belch and Belch repositioning concepts (2004) and the RRI organization's communication climate concept in monitoring, evaluating, and controlling the communication program, which is the affectivity of the program compared to the purposed targets such as output (message transmission), outgrowth (message reception), and outcome (message effect). This study is using the qualitative approach with a positivist paradigm by analyzing data from interviews, focus group discussions, participative observation and documents. The result shows that RRI has done the integration process to create a harmonized implementation of communicating the marketing strategy for all RRI branches.
