ABSTRACT

Many of female migrant workers who experience the acts of violence in the country where they work has resulted bio-psycho-social disorders. With a qualitative approach, this thesis describes the bio-psycho-social rehabilitation process at Home Protection and Trauma Center (RPTC) against women migrant workers that have become the victims of violence action. In addition to that, this research also observes the barrier and its supporting factors for the recovery progress. In this regard, the recovery is to address the problems in multi-levels treatment; physical/biological, psychological and social. This treatment is performed by multi-professions, namely, nurses, psychologists and social workers respectively. It is practiced in integrated stages of social intervention, starting from engagement, assessment, planning, implementation, evaluation, termination and to enclose them with follow up(s). Bio-psycho-social rehabilitation aims to restore the normal conditions of the client's before returning to their family and community in their original place.
