

Analisis ekonomi politik atas dampak keanggotaan Tiongkok di dalam world trade organization WTO terhadap ekonomi dan politik domestik 2001-2010 = Economic and political analysis of China accession in the world trade organization 2001-2010

Syahied Aryolaksono, author

Deskripsi Lengkap: <https://lib.ui.ac.id/detail?id=20386628&lokasi=lokal>

Abstrak

[ABSTRAK

Skripsi ini membahas pengaruh dari keanggotaan Tiongkok di WTO terhadap perkembangan ekonomi dan politik domestiknya, periode 2001-2010. Tiongkok merupakan negara komunis pertama yang meliberalisasikan perekonomiannya dan ingin bergabung dengan rejim perdagangan internasional tersebut. WTO yang merupakan suatu institusi internasional memiliki prinsip-prinsip dan aturan-aturan yang bersifat mengikat bagi setiap anggotanya. Bergabungnya Tiongkok ke dalam WTO menimbulkan dampak yang menarik untuk dipelajari. Skripsi ini bertujuan untuk membahas dan menganalisis seberapa besar dampak positif keanggotaan di WTO terhadap perkembangan ekonomi dan politik Tiongkok. Penelitian ini menggunakan metode deskriptif-analisis dalam penyajiannya dan didukung studi pustaka yang relevan. Hasil penelitian menunjukkan bahwa keanggotaan WTO bagi Tiongkok memberikan beberapa dampak positif bagi perkembangan ekonomi dan politik Tiongkok khususnya dalam ekspansi pasar, peningkatan interdependensi dan munculnya transparansi di Tiongkok.

<hr>

ABSTRACT

This thesis discusses the effects of WTO membership on China's economic and political development throughout 2001-2010. China is the first country to liberalize its economy among communists and was in need for WTO membership. As a multilateral trade organization, WTO has a series of binding regulation and rules which demands total compliance from all of its members. Chinese membership's effects on domestic politics and economy is not only interesting, but also provides important lessons for studies in the political economy of development. The objective of this study is to discuss and analyze how does Chinese entry into the WTO affect its domestic economic and political transformation. This research employs qualitative research methodology with explanatory type of research and supported by relevant literature studies as its data collecting method. It concludes that China's WTO accession provides some positive impacts on China's economic and political development, especially on the development of socialist market economy, developing interdependence and increasing economic and government transparency in China.;This thesis discusses the effects of WTO membership on China's economic and political development throughout 2001-2010. China is the first country to liberalize its economy among communists and was in need for WTO membership. As a multilateral trade organization, WTO has a series of binding regulation and rules which demands total compliance from all of its members. Chinese membership's effects on domestic politics and economy is not only interesting, but also provides important lessons for studies in the political economy of development. The objective of this study is to discuss and analyze how does Chinese entry into the WTO affect its domestic economic and political transformation. This research employs qualitative research methodology with explanatory type of research and supported by relevant literature studies as its data collecting method. It concludes that China's WTO accession provides some positive impacts on China's economic and political development, especially on the development of socialist market economy, developing interdependence and increasing economic and government transparency in China., This thesis discusses the effects of WTO membership on China's economic and political development throughout 2001-2010. China is the first country to liberalize its economy among communists and was in need for WTO membership. As a multilateral trade organization, WTO has a series of binding regulation and rules which demands total compliance from all of its members. Chinese membership's effects on domestic politics and economy is not only interesting, but also provides important lessons for studies in the political economy of development. The objective of this study is to discuss and analyze how does Chinese entry into the WTO affect its domestic economic and political transformation. This research employs qualitative research methodology with explanatory type of research and supported by relevant literature studies as its data collecting method. It concludes that China's WTO accession provides some positive impacts on China's economic and political development, especially on the development of socialist market economy, developing interdependence and increasing economic and government transparency in China.]