ABSTRACT:

The purpose of this research is to examine the role of leader-member exchange (LMX) as a mediator of supervisory socialization tactics and newcomer attitudes. By using purposive sampling technique, this research was conducted in Bank XYZ with 107 respondents who are newcomers. Data analysis used Structural Equation Model (SEM) technique with Partial Least Square (PLS) method. This research found that newcomer perception of LMX mediates the relationship between supervisory socialization tactics and two newcomer attitudes, which are Occupational Identification and Person-organization Fit. The mediating role does not apply to another newcomer attitude, Job Satisfaction.
