ABSTRACT

Focus of the study is about the interpretation of young civil servant ex-private sector employee towards bureaucratic organization's work culture which is showed through communicative performance from the members. This research used interpretive perspective, based on Organizational Culture Theory from Pacanowsky and O'Donnel-Trujillo. This research used ethnography method, and data collection was conducted with participative observation, focus group discussion and in-depth interview. Result of this study indicates that organizational culture was formed by the interpretation about communicative performance from organization members , not by management functions to indoctrinate some ideal values. Communiative performance was constructed by the structure of the organizations, relationship between the members, and leadership. Meanwhile, the new members' interpretation about organizational culture was affected by the field of work experience.
