Abstrak

Previous studies of words used in academic writing have resulted in the vocabulary list of academic English. This study aims at analyzing the use of the word 'etc', the abbreviation for 'etc cetera', which does not belong to one of that list. It is especially concerned with methodological issues relating to the accurate measurement of the usage of that word in academic writing, in this case the data from the corpus of contemporary American English (COCA) and the British National Corpus (BNC). On the basis of findings, it can be concluded that despite the academic writing guidelines in several universities' writing centers in the United States stating to avoid the use of 'etc' and substitute it with 'and so forth' in academic writing, the corpus data show that 'etc' is used mostly in academic writing compared to the other types of writing and is more popular than the use of 'and so forth'.
