Abstrak

<Today's Fortune-Han Chang-hoon> Asia Publishers presents some of the very best modern Korean literature to readers worldwide through its new Korean literature series <Bi-lingual Edition Modern Korean Literature>. We are proud and happy to offer it in the most authoritative translation by renowned translators of Korean literature. We hope that this series helps to build solid bridges between citizens of the world and Koreans through a rich in-depth understanding of Korea. <Part of the story> Unable to watch any longer, the district head stuck his hands out under the black dog, who immediately complained, whining as his legs buckled. The dog's expression was a plain warning not to interfere. So, dogs can also have that kind of expression, Yong-pyo mused, surprised. "Stay still, you dumb bastard." The dog just wouldn't have any of it, whimpering and squirming. "What's going on?" a voice called from outside the wicker gate. The voice belonged to a man who in terms of grey hair and wrinkles could have been about the same age as the district head. "Hey, just dropping by?" the district head greeted him. "Yeah, what's up?" the other man said. "This dumbass dog can't find its way home and is losing it trying to hook up. My God..." the district head shook his head. "Sounds like you're having as hard a time as the dog," the friend chuckled. The district head slapped the dog's rump. "I told you to stay still," he roared. The mutt yelped, but didn't run. "If that doesn't work, you should just take his place," the other man said. Yong-pyo could have turned a deaf ear and kept walking, but couldn't help snickering. And that's when he realized the district head was aiming an angry gaze in his direction.
