ABSTRACT

The Role of Government in Developing Indonesian Film in the Global Film Market
This thesis intent to map out the current conditions and challenges facing Indonesian films within the context of accessing international film markets and to identify suitable supportive government policies. This research departs from studying sales patterns of Indonesian films through participation in international film festivals. The research outcome demonstrates that government policies may play a significant role in internationalizing Indonesian films through various programs to support its sustainable competitiveness. The research is based on qualitative interpretative methods in obtaining information and insights from both domestic and international film industry stakeholders as well as various government policymakers involved in the Indonesian film sector. The outcome of this research is expected to contribute in formulating policy strategies related to support the sustainable internationalization of Indonesian films.
