ABSTRACT

The purpose of this research is to examine the effects of a company's internal factors such as last year cash dividend paid, firm size, cash flow per share, free cash flow, profitability, leverage, earnings per share, growth, and liquidity on their dividend policy. This research includes a sample of 69 companies that always made dividend payments in the year 2007-2016. The results showed that free cash flow, growth in total asset, and leverage have significantly negative effect towards cash dividend paid. On the other hand, profitability, firm size, last year cash dividend paid, and liquidity are discovered to have significantly positive effects towards cash dividend paid. However, the results also indicate that earnings per share and cash flow per share do not have significant effect towards cash dividend paid.
