Economic progress is expected to go hand in hand with the establishment of the country's democratic system. However, there are those who consider democracy to 'handcuff' trade. This study aims to determine whether democracy has an impact on trade in the middle and high income countries in Asia. This study focuses on 11 countries in Asia which are divided by high-income and middle-income countries from 2009 to 2018.

Using panel data regression method, the results of the study found that the interaction between democracy and countries in Asia influences trade. However, it was found that trade in high-income countries was not affected by democracy, whereas trade in low-income countries was strongly influenced by democracy.
