.....The COVID-19 pandemic has triggered a range of responses from the economics and business environment. The market data reveals a strong negative correlation between the first case announcement, the first case announcement and the first death, and every announcement of the Large-Scale Social Restrictions policy (PSBB). In the short term, this research will look at how the constituent stocks of the Indonesian Sharia stock index react to government policies, the rate of spread of COVID-19, and the rate of increase in the capital market by looking at the significance of the t-test of the cumulative abnormal return of all Indonesian Sharia stock index constituent stocks before and during the COVID-19 pandemic. The findings reveal that every change in PSBB policy has an impact on stock returns.
