Abstrak

This study proposes a research question on why six of Eastern European countries held the same their foreign policy orientation toward EU. To answer the question, the study relies on comparative perspective in which its level analysis is still nation state level. Despite of same factors on European-based context, there are substantial different factors on individual context and process of their negotiations. Breakdown of the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact are dominant factors of the regional context, and by this way, EU gives the highest point of his foreign policy's priority to this Eastern Europe countries. Basically, changing of their political systems from close to open society determined their positions in process of the negotiation and the current
