.....By collecting and reviewing newer research and literatures on Family Communications Patterns Theory, it is found that there's complexity and development in terms of implementation and operationalization. Complexity is seen when the new findings support the existence of a group of dyadic relationships within the family and there's interaction between both patterns that empirically prove that both patterns interact with one another. The effect of sociocultural also plays a part resulting in differences of perception and definition in Family Communication Patterns Theory. Therefore, it can be concluded that the three aspects mentioned can contribute to be the references in further research on Family Communications Patterns Theory.
